South- GAZETTE.

[NUMB. 981.]

LONDON, December 25.

WE hear that the secretary of the Prussian embassy has laid before the secretary of state a Memorial; wherein he declares, in the name of his master, that as several merchants, subjects of the king of Prussia, have not yet been able to obtain satisfaction for the ships and cargoes belonging to them which the English guard ships took in the time of the late war, though they had no contraband goods, or effects liable to confiscation, on board; his Prussian majesty had resolved to detain, out of the last payment of the Silesian loan, the amount of the claims of his subjects upon these unlawful prizes, with interest and damages, as stated by commissioners appointed for that purpose. That in consequence of this resolution, his majesty would order payment of the remainder of the principal and in effect of the said loan, after deducting the amount of the said claims and the interest due upon them: And that the subjects of Great Britain, concerned in this loan, might receive it when they pleased, provided that they give receipts under their hands, discharging not only his Prussian majesty, but also the duchy of Silesia.

London, Dec. 26. The sum which the king of Prussia has declared he will stop out of the loan upon mortgage in Silesia, amounts to 194,700 crowns, money of Bra. denburgh; the ships and cargoes of his subjects taken and condemn'd here during the late war amounting to so much, according to the estimate of his commissioners: His Prussian majesty allows the parties concerned a term of three months to make good their objections against the said estimate, in case they think it too high.

Dec. 28. By the last letters from Italy, we have an account of a smart engagement in the harbour of Civita Vecchia, between a large Genoese and a Neapolitan vessel. The Genoese was at her moorings in the harbour. The Neapolitan coming in, anchor'd so near, that she damaged the other's cable. The Genoese then called to her to keep off; but the Neapolitan paying no regard to this advice, nor the threats which followed, the Genoese crew went down to their hold, and arming themselves with the stones that serv'd for ballast, pour'd a volley on the deck of the Neapolitan. The crew of the latter ran to their gun-room, and armed themselves with muskets. At this instant a score of barks, which had been fishing at the island of Procida, came in full sail, and joined their countrymen, the Neapolitans; who, encouraged by such a reinforcement, discharg'd their fire-arms into the Genoese ship, wounding some, and killing others. The Genoese returned their fire by a discharge of their great guns. The Procida barks, upon this, grew very warm for the honour of their flag, and level'd their swivel guns at the Genoese. The matter becoming every moment more serious, the governor of the place, to separate the combatants, fired some guns in the air, and put his garison under arms; but to little purpose. The Neapolitan set fire to the Genoese vessel, and the affair did not end 'till she was burnt to the water-edge.

Dec. 30. The Swallow sloop of war, arrived from the East Indies, has brought an account of a great battle between the Mogul's army, assisted by the English under the command of Major Lawrence, and the rebellious natives, assisted by the French, whereby the latter were entirely defeated. A thousand private men, and above 60 officers of the French, together with the French nabob, surrendered themselves prisoners to the English, but they delivered them up to the Mogul's nabob, who immediately struck off the French nabob's head. A great number were killed and many pieces of cannon taken. — The English behaved with great conduct and resolution throughout the whole affair. When the battle was over, and the French had thrown down their arms, the natives would have massacred them all, but that they threw themselves under the protection of the English, which alone saved them. The French had received but one ship with 300 men from Europe for a long time; which, together with the loss of the ship with store, &c. that was blown up on the coast of Africa (as formerly mentioned) entirely broke their measures. The French officers in number about 70, are on their parole, but are not to serve against the English for a certain time; and the common men (about 900) are to be sent to Europe.

London, January 9. There are letters in town from Berlin, which say, that Voltaire has been forbid the court, and ordered to leave that city.

We hear that some hemp, raised in Scotland, is brought to town for the approbation of the government, &c. in order to procure encouragement for the growth thereof in the North of Scotland.

We hear that a general survey is ordered to be made of all the ships at home, belonging to his majesty's navy, and a report of their condition to be laid before the right honourable the lords of the admiralty.

The oath usually taken by scavengers, questmen, &c. was this year dispensed with by a worthy alderman, who only advised them to act as honest men in their several stations.

January 11. Amongst the new improvements mentioned more than once in a certain County, we are told, that the sowing Saffron of Peru goes on plentifully, in hopes of a Crop in two years time, which perhaps is not much to be depended upon. However, on some occasions, the distribution of Libins of Mexico, with a good Grace, has been found to produce hopeful Effects. — At least for the present.

Yesterday was held a board of admiralty, when the Anson of 60, the Fogues of 64, and the Salisbury of 50 guns, were put in commission, besides two ships of 20, and two sloops of 16, who are all ordered to be man'd with expedition.

It is reported, that some considerable removals will speedily be made amongst the great people of the law.

Two men of war will shortly sail for the Mediterranean, they being ordered to be fitted for the sea; but upon what account remains a secret.

January 13. It is said the land tax will be reduced to two shillings in the pound the ensuing year.
